Of all the activities that happen under the wellness program, health coaching is the most expensive. Whenever employees spend considerable time one-on-one with a health professional there will stand there. Since it is the most expensive health coaching, it should be used where it will have the most impact. There are many pros and cons around health coaching. There is some evidence that the health of coaching the right people at the right time can improve increased health risks. Finding the right people at the right time is the key to successful health coaching. Some job plants want trainers to work with every employee. This is the most expensive and least effective way to do things. News flash-not everyone has increased health risks, and not everyone wants to spend time with a health coach! Staff are not satisfied that they are very motivated or forced into a meeting with a health coach. Whether they have increased health risks are not, meeting with a health coach will most likely be a waste of time for both the employee and the coach. Unfortunately, employees who could get the most out of working with a health coach don't want to meet with one. Each wellness program strives to get as much as necessary employees to participate. WellSteps has been successful in health coaching because we carefully control how we coach the right people at the right time. We ask staff with increased health risks whether they would like any help and whether they would be willing to work with a medical coach. When employees answer yes to this question, it tells us that they are ready for change and are actively looking for ideas, strategies and guidelines on how to improve their health. They are ready to adopt and maintain healthy behaviors. Otherwise, they are not ready for a change and since coaching time professionally is a limited asset, it is best not to chase around unprepared. The percentage of any workforce at risk and willing to make certain changes is usually between 3 and 7% of the total population. It may not seem like very many people, but it puts the focus of coaching dollars where it will do its best. Under this model, staff don't feel that health coaches are harassing them and there is real excitement around the coaching process. Everyone wins: employer, employee and coaching provider. When health coaching is used with the right people at the right time it produces much better results. It also saves wellness budgets so that money can be spent on other effective wellness programs and activities. Every consultant has spent time with jobs that go crazy over health coaching. Basically, health coaching has become a wellness program. Unfortunately, the task of helping employees adopt and maintain healthy behaviors for the rest of their lives requires much more time and energy than a health coach can Since this shows coaching is just one small piece of greater wellness effort. From 2016 to 2017, Wellsteps examined wellness professionals, brokers and consultants. Survey respondents where they asked to rank their wellness vendors on different services. Here are the top 6 corporate health coaches of the company (in alphabetical order): Advanced Wellness Systems When it comes to health coaching programs to go, Advanced Wellness Systems incorporates motivational design and behavioral sciences into their wellness programs to help companies and their employees become successful and productive. Choose Health Choose Health is one of the most recognized health coaching companies in the wellness industry. When Choose Health was founded in 2008, it was designed to be an extension of the risk and loss management services that Sargent & Associates provided to companies at the time. This expansion integrated health coaching programs into companies that helped reduce behavioral risks that would normally cause employees to file compensation claims or commit acts of absenteeism. This has led to an increase in the productivity of these companies and, at the same time, to a reduction in the costs previously incurred by their employees. Choose Health won the 2014 Healthiest Small Company Award by the Boston Business Journal for their dedication to providing health and wellness opportunities for employees of their clients.
